Our Mechanics Were Trained & Certified in Europe

Our onsite service center is staffed by ASE Certified Technicians who offer exemplary services with the utmost integrity to keep your car running optimally. At iAUTOHAUS, we offer auto repair of European cars by European mechanics! And there are a million reasons our technicians are better positioned to work European vehicles. Automotive certification is more rigorous in Europe than in the States. Auto-training in the States usually takes approximately two years where you attend a tech school for nine months to one year. The trainee then goes for factory training where they train per vehicle or vehicle systems for a duration ranging from days to a few weeks to qualify to work in a franchise dealer.

In comparison, Wesley (the owner) studied mechanical engineering for five years in Russia an environment that replicated that in the military. They would be in school for 10 hours Monday through Saturday. Hands-on practical would be every Saturday.

One of our technicians from Hungary took a 3-years auto training in Europe. He had to undertake a test after the training. The tests would continue while still working.

The other technician attended a school in Germany. Kids in Germany must go through 3-5 years of intense training that includes theory, practical, and apprenticeship. In the end, they end up knowing the ins and outs of their chosen fields.
